The idea which is being worked out in the Home Club is a new one. The club contains several hundred members who are also members of local golf clubs, and the scheme is to stage a tournament something like the monthly affairs held at Columbia, a week being allowed the players to complete one round. All of the matches will be played eighteen holes members will probably be selected for the matches. Players who are not members of the club selected will be played as guests of those who do belong.

FIGHTING LAWS NEED REVISION

So Claims Little Miss Lozette Hoag, Manager of Featherweight Kid Marshall.

HOW SHE GETS BOUTS

Girl Manager Is Treated in Strictly Business Fashion in Arranging Fights for Brother.

By GRACE PHELPS.

ew York Representative of The Washington Herald. New York, Aug. 7.— Women can nanage fights, but they ought to stay out of the ring. I'm not a suffragist, but the boxing laws need a lot revision."

With the above words little Miss Lozette Hoag, the only girl manager known to the ring, proved herself to be essentially feminine. But if her reasoning is sometimes contradictory her instinct doesn't often go wrong when it comes to arranging bouts for her brother, "Clarry Marshall." Clarry, who is twenty and five years younger than his blonde manager. stands somewhat in awe of her—as a younger brother should. For in the four fights in which his sister has starred him he has come off better than under his former managers.

"I don't know exactly how she does it," drawled the young feather-weight and ex-soldier, "but I fight better and get more money with Lozette as boss han I ever did before."
"Just how do you go about it." I asked Miss Hoag as she sat beside her "young hope" in their apartments at 67 West 109th street last night.

How She Gets Bouts. The girl manager dropped her blue yes meditatively for a few moments, hen she said, modestly: "Oh, I just go to a manager and tell him I have a brother who fights at 126 pounds and ask him when he expects to have an opening. Then I go over his to-be-opponent's record, and if I think Clarry can put up a good fight against him and the other man isn't a rough fighter. I go to see him train. Then if I decide that he is all right I sign up for a bout." Jess Willard says he doesn't approve of women attending prize fights, but little Miss Hoag declares that the big fighter is directly responsible for her entrance into the game. The young woman, who was a member of a bur-lesque show, was in Kansas City when she met Willard and his manager, Tom

"Willard was doing an exhibition stunt with Al Norton at the time," she said, and I talked to him about my brother. I had met a number of prize fighters and managers, and I asked his advice about becoming my brother's manager. He said I stood a fine chance of making a suc-cess of it, and so did Jones. So I got number of letters to managers here in the East, and when the theatrical sca-son ended in May I started in.

Easy to Praise Brother.

'The managers treat me just like they'd treat a man. It's strictly business all the way through, though, as a matter of fact, she added with a smile. "I think they are more interested in Clarry his fights. Because he is my brother I can praise him to the skies.
